

The Mythology of Quantum Healing

Several of my therapist friends have taken several seminars from Dr. Richard Bartlett¹ dealing with the theory of quantum healing through shifts in consciousness and morphic fields. Bartlett has taken what he calls the “mythology of quantum physics” and incorporated it into a field of quantum healing using “consciousness technologies”. In other words, complete healing takes place in the form of a 21st century shaman who uses the modern archetypes of quantum physics in a new way. Bartlett calls his process “Matrix Energetics”.²

In a sense Bartlett is right. Physicists have created a whole world of imaginary objects and behaviors at the sub-atomic level of existence. Thus, quantum physics is a good story told to us by the modern day high priests of our culture; the scientists. They even wear the white robes or lab coats simulating priestly garb.

Some of Bartlett’s Axioms

Bartlett has a talent for capturing the difficult concepts of quantum physics and simplifying them for public consumption in pithy little sayings. In this newsletter I will use them to communicate Bartlett’s unique message.

The Measurement Problem

*Therefore, in an act of observation, a quantum measurement, consciousness not only collapses the possibility wave or the object, but also the possibility of the brain.*³

With this statement Bartlett is saying that not only our bodies and the universe are the result of conscious observation, but so is our brain. Just by observing, we co-create reality through consciousness. Therefore, change your consciousness, change your reality. Why then, do things appear not to change and continue to travel in a steady progression of past, present, and future? It is because of our conditioned brains.

Quantum Reality

*Our brains reconstruct those patterns of energy, and re-assemble them into pictures and sensations in effect providing for us the images and experiences that we expect to see and to encounter ‘out there’.*⁴

Bartlett believes that we are conditioned by our past experiences to experience the same stimuli in the same way as in the past. This biases the possibilities toward repeating passed experiences rather than generating new ones. Even our physical brain takes on more grooves and folds thus incasing us in repetitive synaptic clusters. Therefore, when we see a cue ball hitting the eight ball on the pool table, we expect the eight ball to move like it has always done so based on past experience. Once these habits are formed, we have conditioned a quantum memory. We are in a sense imprisoned by our quantum memory.

The universe is collapsing around us at too many times a second to observe consciously. Like a 35 millimeter film sending light through each still frame at 30 frames per second, we have the illusion that there is movement on the movie screen. When in reality, a series of still frames are moving across the screen giving us the illusion of movement, time, and change.

Bartlett believes that we can influence the collapse locally and change our health, our circumstances; the possibilities are endless. But where are these circumstances stored? Where is the cosmic memory?

Morphic Fields and Waves

*Morphic fields are non-material regions of influence, extending in space-time localized around the systems which they organize. A morphic field provides a means by which a particular implicate pattern may unfold in the material realm.*⁵

Morphic fields are kind of like electromagnetic fields that contain patterns. These patterns govern the entire universe and are subject to human intention among other forces. Thus, the shape of your personal morphic field controls the shape of your body. Bartlett teaches how to alter your perception and consciousness causing the morphic field to re-configure itself. Usually this takes place instantly but it can also start a process that we experience over time.

The Two Point Method

*The points can be chosen randomly, it does not matter; it just gives the left brain something to do. Then we're going to pick a second point, here, because we got to find a point that makes that point feel connected.*⁶

Bartlett picks a point on the client's body, let say a sore shoulder as point one. Then he picks a second point randomly. He describes this Two Point method as:

1. Locate a point which feels non-mobile, stuck or rigid.
2. Find a second point which accentuates what you notice from the first point.
3. The awareness of these two points allows for a measurement to be made.
4. The act of observing collapses the waveform of the condition.
5. Notice what is now different.⁷

If done correctly point one and two merge and become non-local and allow for the new perception or measurement. The new intention collapses a new wave and the condition in the physical world changes.

Summary

Bartlett's seminars look more like a charismatic miracle service, with people falling harmlessly to the ground when receiving their treatments, then a seminar about energy healing. None the less, he has the endorsement of a famous physicist; Dr. William A. Tiller. Tiller even wrote the foreword in Bartlett's book Matrix Energetics.⁸

On the pro side, Bartlett's out of the box thinking has created a new way of looking at the world and the mechanics behind its creation and maintenance. He is a creative thinker and a pioneer.

On the con side, Bartlett has no scientific data to support or deny the efficacy of Matrix Energetics. He only has anecdotal evidence and no hard science. Back in the 1970's it was discovered that a great percentage of people healed at charismatic miracle services lost their healing in less than a week. Of course the preachers blamed them for losing faith and for losing their healing.

I think that Bartlett is honing in on some unique truths that need to be brought into the daylight consciousness of objectivity. However, like the cold fusion experiments that can never be reproduced, I believe that consciousness does control the universe, but that we do not really know enough to fully harness it. Just as we have not mastered cold fusion energy, neither have we fully understood that great divine consciousness, in all of its modalities, which stands behind all of creation. But just as the drop cannot comprehend the ocean, it can however reconnect with it. Someday, we will reconnect with God and discover fire, for the second time.
